GAME RULES (1/2)

The Best Seller

"The Best Seller" is a board game for 2 to 6 teams, where each team chooses a business strategy linked to a specific color. These strategies are determined by the question set chosen by the game manager, or moderator. The game board consists of six different colors with unique questions. Additionally, there are three general question categories (Megatrends, Sales and Chance) and a rainbow space where anyone, regardless of their chosen color, can receive and answer a question. By answering correctly, players earn points, with the number of points determined by the moderator. As a player, the aim is to score the most points. You do this by playing tactically and only landing on your own color, the rainbow space or the black areas. As a player, your goal is to earn the most points. You do this by playing strategically and landing only on your own color, the rainbow space, or black spaces. If you land on a space of a different color, the question goes to the opposing team of that color, and you lose your chance!

The board

All players start in the center space, and there's no set direction you must move. In the top-left corner, you'll see the current round. On the right side of the screen, you'll find the leaderboard, which updates automatically after every round. The leaderboard displays the players in descending order of points, showing each player's most recent score (on the left) and the score from the previous round (on the right), making it easier for everyone to track how many points were earned in a round. Below the leaderboard is the dice, which can only be rolled once per round.

On the far right, you'll find the game rules, optional background music, and a translation feature. Only the moderator can see the progress bar under the board, which shows player statuses: for example, Player 1 hasn't made a move yet, Players 2 and 3 are answering a question, Player 4 is ready to be reviewed, and the last two players have completed their turns and been reviewed.

Game Duration

The game can be played in one session, lasting approximately one to two hours depending on the number of players and rounds. Set clear agreements with all teams beforehand. The game duration is flexible, and it's not expected that everyone will handle all scenarios and questions. Each team decides how long they take to answer a question. A team finishes the game when the predetermined number of rounds is complete or when everyone in the team has completed their "situation and question booklets." If a team is quickly overtaken, you may want to have an extra challenge ready for them.

Points

Points are earned when participants provide good and thoughtful answers—the better the answer, the more points they earn. The winning team is the one with the most points.

Gameplay

The game is designed so that once the moderator starts it, everyone can roll the dice simultaneously. The number you roll determines which space you land on, but you choose your direction. You will then receive a question to answer—take your time to respond.

After submitting your answer, the moderator will assign points. You can take a break until the moderator finishes reviewing the answers from other players (only the moderator can see who has completed their responses). Once that's done, you'll see your points. The moderator decides when the next round begins!

End of the Game

The game ends when all rounds are completed. A new screen will then open, displaying a leaderboard in point order. The player with the most points is shown in gold, the second in silver, the third in bronze, and the rest in gray.

Gamification

Gamification involves using game elements in a learning context. "The Best Seller" is an educational game built around gamification and incorporates classic game elements like rules, progression, rewards, time limits, and storytelling. A key component of the game is its social aspect—players collaborate in teams and compete against others. This enhances engagement and learning for all participants.

It's important that the element of "competition" does not overshadow professionalism, and as a facilitator, you can manage this balance. Groups may respond differently depending on their composition and dynamics. You decide how strict to be with scoring, time management, winner selection, prize distribution, handling cheating, and more.
